MR. NOVEMBER (Harlequin Comics)

Synopsis

Amanda is a twenty-four-year-old virgin, who's been avoiding men due to memories from her past. She also volunteers for a charity that's important to her, but this time, her project is to create a risqué calendar of sexy firemen. The most irresistible of them all is Deputy Chief Josh Marshall, and Amanda is determined to gain his cooperation. When she visits the station to talk to him, he tells her he'll participate as long as Amanda shows him her sexy side, too.

Heartwrenching. Emotional. Hot. That sums up the last of the "Men to the Rescue" trilogy from author Lori Foster. And saving the best for last, she delivers a story worthy of the man in the hero's shoes. Josh Marshall, firefighter and man about town, never missed a chance to razz his best friends when the love bug caught them. But when the tables are turned and the hunky fireman falls head over heels for the woman bent on including him in her charity calendar, it's a whole different story. He knows that below Amanda Barker's frosty exterior is a woman waiting for the right man to awaken her passion and he knows that he's the one. Amanda has a secret. One that keeps her from enjoying life to the fullest, that drives her to help others, that keeps her from getting close to any man. She's absolutely sure that Josh Marshall will prove no different.

Sheâ€™s heard about his past; heâ€™s known as quite the ladyâ€™s man. But heâ€™s out to prove her wrong. And with the right woman, we watch Josh grow into a caring, sensitive and very patient lover. The axiom â€œThe bigger they are, the harder they fallâ€• is certainly true in Joshâ€™s case and when itâ€™s his turn at the altar of love, he doesnâ€™t like it one bit when his friends, Mick and Zack, razz him the same way heâ€™d done to them on many occasions. His testiness makes him believable and endearing. The dialogueâ€™s snappy and the love scenes are hotter than hot. And Ms. Foster has no equal when it comes to creating friendship, camaraderie and the sometimes wackiness that exists between men who are closer than brothers, bonded together, in this case, through their professions. In the Dear Reader section in the front of the book, Ms.

Amanda Barker devotes most of her nonworking hours to charity work. She's currently putting together a calendar that incorporates a different firefighter for each month of the year to benefit a local burn institute. The calendar is virtually complete, lacking only Mr. November. Josh Marshall would make the perfect model for the month, if only he would stop saying no. When her request becomes personal, Amanda can't back down. She doesn't want Josh to see her panic every time he comes too close. Seven years ago Amanda made a promise to herself, swearing to make reparation in the only way left to her, allowing her to live with memories and overwhelming guilt. In an interesting twist on role reversal, Josh doesn't like the idea of posing for a calendar because it makes him into a sex object rather than valuing the work he performs. Beneath Amanda prissy exterior, Josh senses a woman filled with fear. Her elegant control embodies the opposite elements that he finds attractive in women, yet he's attracted to Amanda in the strongest way. Josh wants to transform Amanda from a sweet, refined, classy recluse to the wild and unreserved woman he believes her to be. He hadn't meant to delve into her past or confront her ghosts, but seeing her fear makes him involved. Indeed, Amanda stymies Josh, but he's up to the challenge. He agrees to model for her calendar if she'll agree to his courtship. Lori Foster's unmatched talent for creating sparkling characterizations once again shines in MR. NOVEMBER. As playboy hero Josh meets his match in petite Amanda, sparks fly. Josh doesn't hesitate to commit himself to Amanda, despite a string of women and wild reputation. Nor does he dodge the tremendous burden of guilt that has paralyzed her for so long.
